OkiDocky: the iPhone app that remembers where you put things

Two taps. Nothing else. Made in Italy, OkiDocky lands on the App Store to end the hunt for keys, documents and chargers.

OkiDocky, a new iPhone app from LikeHome, is available today on the App Store. It does one thing, and does it fast: it helps you remember where you put something. Type what, type where, done: “Cellar keys → hallway drawer”.

The passport you use once a year, the spare keys, the charger for the old camera, the Christmas decorations in the attic: everyone has things they put “somewhere safe” and then can’t find. Inventory apps tend to be overkill, and scattered notes get lost. OkiDocky sits right in between: simple enough that you’ll actually use it, organised enough to find anything in a second.

How it works

- What and Where. Every item has two essential fields, plus an optional emoji, collection and notes.
- Collections. The home screen is a grid of colour-coded collections — Home, Cellar, Office, Car — so everything is visible at a glance.
- Instant search. Type “passport” and the answer appears as you type.
- Trash and restore. Nothing is lost by accident: deleted items can be recovered.
- Share and export. Send a family member where something is, or export and import a complete backup of your data.

"We wanted an app that asks nothing of you: no sign-up, no tutorial, no permission pop-ups on first launch. Open it, note where you put something, close it. Every design decision went through one question: does this add a tap? If it did, we took it out."

Built for iOS 26

OkiDocky is built in SwiftUI for iOS 26 and embraces Apple's Liquid Glass design language from day one: glass toolbars and buttons, fluid transitions and a large coral "+" button always within thumb's reach. There are no welcome screens, permission prompts or sample data on first launch — the app is ready to use immediately.

Free, with OkiDocky+ for those who want more

OkiDocky (free)

- Up to 10 items
- Collections, search, notes and emoji
- Trash and restore
- Sharing
- Data export and import

OkiDocky+

- Unlimited items and collections
- GPS location for each item
- iCloud sync and backup
- Face ID lock
- Multi-select
- Custom emoji for collections

OkiDocky+ is available as an annual subscription at €4.99 (with a 7-day free trial) or as a one-time "Forever" purchase at €9.99. Both unlock exactly the same features. Users who return to the free plan keep full access to everything they've already saved — data is never held hostage.

Privacy

OkiDocky requires no account or sign-up. Data stays on the user's iPhone and, for OkiDocky+ users, syncs through their own personal iCloud. GPS location is optional and is only requested when the user chooses to use it.

Pricing and availability

OkiDocky is available from [LAUNCH DATE] as a free download on the App Store for iPhone running iOS 26 or later, in English and Italian. Learn more at okidocky.app.
